Accomplishments

I focused a lot early this week on the presentation that I was going to give, since I feel that I am not the greatest at presentations. After it was over, there was a fair to large amount of other work that had to be done; many things are often due in the last week of classes. I spent a lot of my time working on software, and helping other teammates with toolchain issues. As stated during the presentation, the mandelbrot demo has been demonstrated on my own machine in a multithreaded fashion. Today the other team members report that we are ready to test floating point instructions,

Schedule

We're working hard on our demo. Tomorrow will be an all day affair on capstone. We are confident that we will have interesting things to show, and then can finish up the final report for submission on wednesday. It has been a good semester of learning, trying new things, and most importantly learning the process of design.
